If you think, a strategical advantage can be gained by folding every hand, why don't you just do this yourself? It's not like, someone else has this option, but you don't. Also, it's not entirely clear to me, if you are only talking about freerolls or maybe CC freerolls specifically, or all online games in general? In the latter case, I will say that neither you or anyone else have the right to determine, what people are allowed to do with their own money, as long as they follow the rules of the game. If someone has paid the entrance fee and wants to sit out or fold every hand for whatever reason, that's entirely up to them. If you are only talking about freerolls, then playing these is a privilege, and I could be on board with removing players, who have not taken action within the first two blind levels, as Andyreas describe. But there is a much more simple solution. On pokerstars a sit-out player cannot win a forced all-in. This makes it highly unlikely, it will be possible to fold all the way to the money, which you have some chance of doing on sites like 888 Poker. And as a result there is much less incentive for people to register for a PokerStars freeroll, which they have no intention of playing. As for CC games specifically I think, it would be fair to revoke people's playing privilege, if they are found to be repeatedly registering for freerolls without showing up and playing them. Maybe a moderator could give a warning, and if it happens again, then platinum status is withdrawn, or whatever the appropriate sanction might be deemed to be.
